

Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors

Week of 4/22/2024

By Shauna Krause, President, Capitol Services, Inc.

I look into fifty reasons why a contractor needs a license where they want to work. While common contractor licensing nationwide might make sense, the reality is very different. Keeping the family business in the family requires foresight that the unexpected must be planned for...

Q: I am a licensed contractor in the State of Arizona. One of my customers would like me to do a job for them in Southern California. My Company is a Limited Liability Company (LLC) and I understand there are many requirements for LLC's to obtain a contractor's license in California. My customer mentioned something about being able to get permission from the CA licensing board to do one job in CA without obtaining a CA license, being that I'm licensed in Arizona and there is a reciprocal agreement between the two States. Is that possible and if so, how do I go about getting permission?

A: That is not a possibility. And contracting work you do in CA which is over $500 requires that you obtain a CA contractor's license. There is no temporary license or waiver of the licensing requirement based on holding a license in a reciprocal State. Every state has it's own, individual rules and licensing requirements.

Q: Do you know by chance if CA has reciprocity with FL in terms of General Contractor (GC) licenses? Specifically, the employee's GC license we're using in FL, could we use his license in CA as well?

A: No, CA does not have reciprocity with FL. Even with the States that CA has reciprocity with, you can't just use the out-of-State license in CA. You would still need to apply for a CA license and complete all the requirements, including taking the law exam.

Q: We have a corporate license in which my Dad is the RMO and the only Officer listed on the license. He is currently not doing well and we are making plans to ensure the license is in order, if and when, something were to happen to him. Is there a way that I can replace him as the RMO, but have him still be shown as an Officer of the corporation? The idea being that he is still a part of the business and will continue to be for the time being, but we want to set it up so that the license is not left with no one associated with it and more importantly, that no projects are in jeopardy if something were to happen to him. I have worked for my Dad for over 20 years now if that is of any importance.

A: Sorry to hear about your Dad not doing well. Yes, you can replace your Dad as the RMO on the license and keep him on the license as an Officer. There is a box on the CSLB's replacement application which asks just that question and you just mark it if the current Qualifier is to remain on the license as an officer.

Because you've worked for the company for over five years, you can request a Waiver of the exams when you complete the replacement process. Let me know if you would like our assistance with the process.

While knowledge is power, knowing where to go for the answers is half the battle. ## INTRODUCTION

Rigging is a system of ropes, cables, chains, connectors, hooks, clamps, etc. that are used to support loads or cargo being lifted from one place to another. Rigging that is misused or stored in improper places will significantly increase the amount of risk involved with hoisting materials.

PROPER USE AND CARE

Under no circumstances is rigging to be loaded by anyone other than a qualified person (rigger) or by a trainee under the direct visual supervision of a rigger. In addition, employees who work with rigging must:

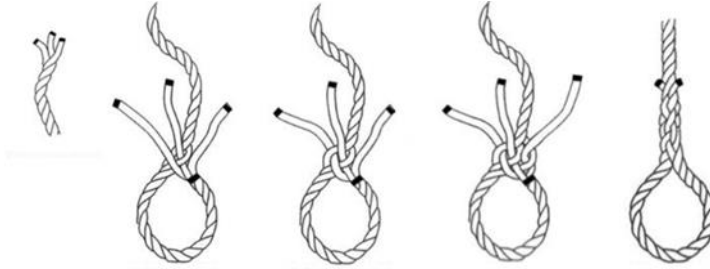

- Visually inspect rigging for defects before working, and never use any rigging that may cause a hazard. Things to watch out for may include:
  - Abnormal wear
  - Powdered fiber between strands
  - Broken or cut fibers
  - Variations in the size or roundness of strands
  - Discoloration or rotting
  - Distortion of hardware in the sling
- Rigging equipment must have permanent and legible identification markings that indicate the recommended maximum load capacity.
- Rigging must not be loaded beyond its maximum load capacity, except for test purposes.
- All components of rigging must be free from any kinks or twists before use.
- Make sure there are no lines or components twisted around each other.
- After use, rigging must be stored so as not to become an entanglement hazard for other employees and where they will be safe from moisture, chemicals, or excess heat.

SPLICING

Any splices made in rigging must be made in accordance with the rope manufacturer's recommendations and only by an experienced employee. The following standards are required to maintain the structural integrity of rigging when splicing:

- In manila rope, eye splices should contain at least three full tucks, and short splices should contain at least six full tucks (three on each side of the center line of the splice).

- In synthetic fiber rope, eye splices should contain at least four full tucks, and short splices should contain at least eight full tucks (four on each side of the center line of the splice). For all eye splices, the eye must be sufficiently large to provide an included angle no greater than 60 degrees at the splice when the eye is placed over the load or support.
- Employees must never use knots in place of splices.
- Clamps that are not designed specifically for the type of rigging used must not be used for splicing.

CONCLUSION

Employees who work with rigging must understand its maximum load capacity, proper care and storage, and splicing guidelines to make sure it stays in top condition. Rigging that has been handled improperly may cause serious damage and injury if it fails while hoisting a load.
